President's Report

Dear Members,

Your Committee continues to be busy with planning for 2006 and working on Casa priorities. Our quest to seek an appropriate location for our head office is still ongoing. Hampered by Council zoning requirements with limited opportunities in the current market to match our needs. With a strong national network, through the support of our Interstate Representatives we have maintained a harmonious existence. Another work in progress currently is to review our website in terms of contents with particular intention of including a 'photo gallery' and addressing ideas on how to make this site more interesting for all our users. If you wish to offer suggestions please do contact us via our website: www.casademacau.org.au mailto: info@casademacau.org.au on this and other matters you may wish to bring to our attention.

It was an honour for me to represent our Casa on the 24th January at the Chinese New Year celebrations hosted by the Chinese Consul General of Sydney at their new premises at Camperdown. This auspicious occasion was well attended by many local businesses and community affiliations, including the Chinese media.

May Easter blessings, joy and peace be with you.

As mentioned in my January's report, the Presidents of the Casas met with Dr. J. Antunes, Director of Macau Government Tourism Office (MGTO) last November 2005 for a session on future collaborative efforts by networking with all the Casas to assist with the marketing and promotion of Macau. There was agreement that each of the Casas provide information for MGTO to analyse. We recently received a reply for joint cooperation and MGTO's supportive contribution towards our activities. A very positive outcome for future engagements.

Our annual Dia de St. Joao will be held in Sydney on 25th June, 2006. Details of same accompanies this newsletter. Interstate Representatives will be organising the individual State functions to coincide with this significant day and New South Wales event. Socials will be featured in our next newsletter.

Our Casa will be holding a 'Childrens' Christmas in July' social at Luna Park (see accompanying details) for New South Wales. Organised by two of our younger Committee Members, initiated by Jose da Silva and aptly assisted by Antonieta Manolakis. This event will be happening on Sunday 30th July 2006. It's a special day targeted for our junior members. As the emphasis is on the younger members, notice is hereby given that this year's New South Wales Christmas Dinner Function scheduled for Sunday 3rd December 2006 at Marigold Chinese Restaurant, will therefore be restricted for members 18 years and over. Feedback from last November's event highlighted the inappropriateness of a Sunday evening function particularly for young children. Please note also that Casa's 12th Annual General Meeting will be held on Saturday 16th September, 2006 at Wests Leagues Club, Ashfield at 10am.

Lusitano Club of California & Casa de Macau, California have extended an invitation for our Armando Santos' CD was recently launched with much success in Sao Paulo, Brazil. This CD, is made up of 12 songs, 7 in Patua and 5 in Portuguese, sponsored by Alex Airoso and composed/performed by Armando Santos. Apart from Macau, North America and Portugal this will be made available also in Australia. A copy will be donated to each Casa with copies to be made available for sale with the revenue from this, as recommended by the Sponsors, to go back into our coffers towards social functions and to be played for the enjoyment of our members at these events. The annual 'Festa das Provincias' will be held at Sydney Portugal Community Club, Frazer Park, 100 Marrickville Rd. Marrickville on Sunday 23rd April, 2006. Casa have been invited to participate and your Committee is hoping to organise a Macanese sweets and cakes stall. This will only be possible if we have sufficient volunteers to help with baking of cakes, or to go on a roster. Of course our members are all welcome to attend this occasion. If you can assist please contact us via our website email: info@casademacau.org.au Subject: Festa das Provincias.

Our members in Melbourne were on a high during last month's 18th Commonwealth Games. The 11 days of events with representation from over 71 countries resulted in a medal tally for Australia of 221 (84 gold, 69 silver & 68 bronze). Bravo and well done to all the athletes and volunteers.

Please remember the community in far north Innisfail in your prayers, as they recover from the recent devastation inflicted by Cyclone Larry.

May Easter blessings, joy and peace be with you.

Kind Regards,

Yvonne Herrera

Congratulations to Fausto (Nonoy) Bayot on his 80th Birthday. Fausto celebrated with 80 family and friends at a party organised by his children on Saturday 25th March. His daughters and grandchildren from Hawaii were also here to celebrate this wonderful occasion.

Mat 27:33-37 Then they went out to an area known as Golgotha, that is, "Skull Hill", where the soldiers gave him drugged wine to drink; but when he had tasted it, he refused. After the crucifixion, the soldiers threw dice to divide up his clothes among themselves. Then they sat around and watched him as he hung there. And they put a sign above his head, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews."

Mat 27:63-66 and told him, "Sir, that liar once said, 'After three days I will come back to life again.' So we request an order from you sealing the tomb until the third day, to prevent his disciples from coming and stealing his body and then telling everyone he came back to life! If that happens we'll be worse off than we were at first." "Use your own Temple police," Pilate told them. "They can guard it safely enough." So they sealed the stone and posted guards to protect it from intrusion.

Mat 28:2-8 Suddenly there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord came down from heaven and rolled aside the stone and sat on it. His face shone like lightning and his clothing was brilliant white. The guards shook with fear when they saw him and fell into a dead faint. Then the angel spoke to the women, "Don't be frightened!" he said. "I know you are looking for Jesus who was crucified, but he isn't here! For he has come back to life again, just as he said he would. Come in and see where his body was lying.....and now go quickly and tell the disciples that he has risen from the dead and that he is going to Galilee to meet them there. That is my message to them. The women ran from the tomb, badly frightened, but also filled with joy and rushed to find the disciples to give them the angel's message. And as they were running, suddenly Jesus was there in front of them!"

THE LADIES OF LITTLE FLOWER CLUB

Rummaging around old photos, Virgie McDougall discovered the photograph on this page. It was taken on the grounds of Little Flower Club in Kowloon. We had a great time identifying all the ladies present. I was quite surprised that I was able to remember the names of 95% of the ladies – quite a few of them were my aunts and cousins or related by marriage to the vast Yvanovich clan, lovingly called “Outsiders” by my Uncle Vicente. I am guessing that the occasion was farewell luncheon for the Menezes sisters, Celeste Menezes Ribeiro and Marie Menezes. They immigrated to Australia sometime in the 1950s.

The Little Flower Club’s founding members were Hedewiges da Silva, Bertha Vaz Barretto, Aurea Baptista and Dona Reça (the lady who taught Portuguese to many of the Hong Kong came to a standstill during the occupation. There was no way of earning a living in Hong Kong, all assets were frozen or could only be converted to worthless Japanese script. Many left for Macau with their children to wait out the war.

The Macau Government generously provided for all who wished to accept food and lodging. While in Macau, those who had husbands and sons in POW camps received a subsidy from the British Government through the British Consul. Many of the younger men who were not in camp were hired by the British Consul as guards. However, a few of the ladies opted to stay behind in Hong Kong, some because they had homes which could not be abandoned for fear of complete destruction by looters. By selling some of their precious possessions, some were able to hang on and provide their husbands in camp with food parcels. In 1943, the Red Cross opened a shelter for POW families at Rosary Hill and many of the ladies moved up to the Hill. The Club was abandoned and the looters did their work well.

Canossian Institute students). The Club was primarily a Catholic Action Ladies Club. At first, they would meet in a little room in the rectory of the Hong Kong Catholic Cathedral and as they recruited more members, they moved to rented quarters in Jordan Road, Kowloon, and eventually to their permanent location at Kings’ Park, right next door to Club de Recreio. The Macao Catholic Action Ladies were invited to join the Club. Aurea Baptista formed a band called “Lira das Florinhas” and they performed in many of the Macanese functions.

World War II put a stop to all this; the ladies had to take care of their families on their own, as many of their husbands were interned as Prisoners of War. Everything in

When World War II ended and we were allowed to return to Hong Kong and life normalised, all that remained of the Club house were the 4 walls. Bishop Valtorta asked Rita Xavier to help him rebuild the Club. Through her connections in the building trade, Rita was able to bring the Club house back to its pre-war state. Rita was President of the Club for 10 years in those early post war days. I understand Betty Baptista is presently running the Club.

John Rocha is a hugely successful designer but he tells Topaz Amore he refuses to follow what is fashionable

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH 12 Feb, 2006

As a boy growing up in a rundown area of sweltering Hong Kong, John Rocha would sometimes slip into the Mandarin Oriental hotel just to experience air conditioning. He had to hustle through the lobby lest they threw him out, which you might think defeated the object of the exercise.

But Rocha lived in a 400 sq ft apartment with his parents, grandmother and seven brothers and sisters - "one bedroom for my mother and father, and we were all on the floor", he remembers.

There weren't many treats.

Today, Rocha's fashion and interiors business turns over about €250m (£165m) a year. These days he stays at the Mandarin Oriental when he visits his mother rather than flitting surreptitiously through the lobby.

Rocha's childhood home would fit inside his new office, a first-floor salon stretching the width of the listed Georgian townhouse in Dublin that has just become his headquarters.

"Think of that," Rocha marvels, chuckling at his good fortune. "My home was smaller than my office!"

The floorboards are polished bitter-chocolate; the walls are white. There are tantalising glimpses of work in progress on mannequins - Rocha, 52, will show about 45 womenswear outfits at London Fashion Week, operating from Claridge's. In Dublin he walks to the office and works at a long glass table to the music of Bob Marley, Bob Dylan and Miles Davis. It must be a tense time but the atmosphere is tranquil.

Robbie Williams wore John Rocha for his "Angel" video; other clients include Ireland's music "Murphia", from Bono and Van Morrison to Ronan Keating and Sinéad O'Connor. Anjelica Huston, too, has been drawn to the simplicity of his designs.

But Rocha is not starstruck. "I dress pop stars and I dress my doctor," he says. "It's about attitude. I do what I love and I'm lucky to do it. It's a long way from Hong Kong."

As well as his own label, Rocha has had long relationships creating clothes for Debenhams and crystal for Waterford Wedgwood. He has expanded into interior design for hotels - including the Morrison in Dublin - and upmarket property developments.

He's not a one-man band - Rocha works with his wife, Odette, and often finds himself designing wedding dresses for other members of the team. However, he is the creative crux.

With a house in Cap Ferrat and an art collection that includes Picasso and Matisse, Rocha can afford to turn down work. He didn't always have that luxury. Rocha left Hong Kong to train as a psychiatric nurse in Surrey, arriving in 1971 with £13 to his name. Though he loved nursing - his routine is still to start work early - he hated the smell of incontinence and disinfectant. Encouraged by a girlfriend studying fashion, he joined her at college in Croydon.

He was a late developer. "I was useless," says Rocha. "My style was so understated and everyone else was far more talented. When I left college, nobody expected much of me - and nor did I."

Rocha's father was particularly depressed. "He was horrified when I gave up nursing. He was horrified when I left Hong Kong. He wanted me to get a job, any job, and work my way up wherever it was. It worked well for my brother, who ended up working at Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank. He's retired now."

Rocha Snr was from a well-off Portuguese family (Rocha's paternal grandfather was a civil servant for the British) but he became estranged from his family, who disapproved of the match, after he fell for Rocha's mother in an ice-cream parlour. "Because of that he never finished his education but he spoke beautiful colonial English," says Rocha.

"When I was young we always went to our posh cousins at Christmas. My dad made sure we had new shoes and clean clothes - he was really proud and that's why I felt different from everyone living around me. We had the first television on the estate, the first fridge.

I thought there must be another way - I didn't want to live on council estates for the rest of my life. I finished school and my father's brother worked for Jardine Matheson. For some reason he liked me, and suggested England."

His father only recognised what his son had achieved many years later, when he saw a photograph of Rocha with the supermodel Naomi Campbell in the South China Morning Post. However, he died shortly before it was announced that Rocha had been awarded a CBE.

Rocha's success can be measured in financial terms as well: last year, profits at Rocha's Three Moon Design company rose by €1.2m to €2.7m. Rocha and Odette, the only shareholders, paid themselves €760,326 and the company spent €551,797 on works of art.

In Rocha's early career, though, his father's pessimism looked well-placed. Although understated clothes in taupe, greige and charcoal couldn't be more fashionable now, initially little went right. Rocha married, moved to Ireland and started a company, but his marriage soon fell apart. "The business fell apart too. It was a very difficult period."

After a year, he began seeing Odette. The pair started working together but these were the power-dressing 1980s and there was little demand for organic fabrics and muted tones. Obstinate, Rocha refused to create big-hair wear, preferring to shut up shop - again. Surely he could have had a go at shoul-

Queensland.Casa Christmas Luncheon:-

The luncheon was held on Saturday, 3rd December, 2005 at the Sofitel Hotel, Brisbane, at 12 noon. Our members are always delighted to hold our functions there. The smorgasbord was delicious as usual, and the service was excellent!

Our members had no worries with parking their cars, as it was previously arranged for a flat rate of $5 per car. A few members, who are Gold Coast residents, conveniently came by train, which stop right under Sofitel Hotel Brisbane.

The attendance was great, even during this Festive Season period. There were 77 members and 3 guests, plus Casa's three new baby members!

Once again our Queensland Casa Social Committee would like to thank all members and guests who supported us during this 2005. There will be more activities and fun to be organized by our Queensland Casa Social Committee for 2006!

der pads? Rocha's expression is both kindly and pitying. "I will never see myself as a businessman. I'm a designer. I have to be true to what I believe." It was the same at college, when fellow students were churning out 1970s psychedelia. What was he doing? "Woven tweed." It's just as well he didn't have other shareholders.

A despairing Lynne Franks, who was doing his PR, advised Rocha to go to Italy and think again. In Milan, he spent two years working for Martine Sitbon and Dries van Noten, waiting for UK tastes to change. They did, eventually. Rocha was named British designer of the year in 1994 and has never looked back.

Being in control of his destiny was always important. He learned the hard way how to combine this with running a business. Rocha at first believed that he should design and make his clothes, create the fabric and then market and sell the finished article. He opened shops even though retailing wasn't his strength.

"Even after we came back from Italy, in the mid 1990s, we still felt we could do everything ourselves and we were not making any money. We decided to change, do everything under licence. We shut the Sloane Avenue shop. Let others use their retail or manufacturing expertise. My expertise is design and marketing."

Dublin is very much home for Rocha. Life couldn't get much better, he believes: he's his own boss and has time to indulge his passions: fly-fishing all over the world, and art. His collection also includes Francis Bacon, he tells me.

Now there's a tortured artist. Isn't there anything of that in Rocha? Does he ever struggle for inspiration? "Oh yes. I got up at 3am last night, thinking. Sometimes I get up and come into the office. Once I sit down, things just happen." He has a Zen-like outlook.

"They did a documentary on me 10 years ago, when I still did catwalk shows in Paris. The director said to me, 'Where's the drama?' The thing is, there wasn't any. There never is. It's just the way we are."

LUSITANO'S 10-DAY TOUR OF AUSTRALIA MELBOURNE, CAIRNS & SYDNEY.

By MICHAEL MCDUGALL

Saturday, November 12:

Melbourne

Shortly before noon on Saturday, November 12, my wife Dawнна and I were among the members of the Lusitano party who arrived in Melbourne after traveling 7,800 miles on a "red-eye" flight from San Francisco with a stopover in Sydney. Lusitano president Maria Roliz, husband Hunter Choi, Bonnie Braga, and her mother Fabia were also part of the group.

After clearing the Australian immigration and customs, we were met at the airport by Lesley Bryden, our local guide, who welcomed us and led us to a chartered coach to take us to our hotel. As we went on a quick tour through the central part of the city she gave us a lively introduction to Australia and Melbourne.

Bryden passed around a map of Australia superimposed on that of the lower 48 United States at the same scale showing that they were about the same size. But whereas the U.S. has 296 million people distributed over the country, Australia has 20 million, almost all living in cities at its coasts. Its interior, known as the Outback, is mostly desert with very little rainfall.

We checked in at our hotel at the edge of Chinatown, grabbed a quick lunch at one of the Asian restaurants outside the hotel, and resumed our guided tour. Melbourne is also known as the Garden City because of the many public parks, the wide streets lined with shade trees, and the green corridor of the Yarra River that runs through the city.

We visited Fitzroy Gardens to see its Conservatory, and its large mature trees. Here in the Southern Hemisphere, late spring was in evidence with spectacular purple jacarandas, Golden rain (Koelreuteria elegans), and poincianas (known in Hong Kong as "Flame-of-the forest"). A popular attraction here is Captain Cook's cottage which was moved stone by stone to the present location in 1934.

Sunday, November 13: The Great Ocean Road, Victoria

Early this day we boarded our coach which headed for the coast south of Melbourne towards the Great Ocean Road, which we were told is one of the great coastal roads of the world, some 160 miles long. We were able to see one the main attractions called the Twelve Apostles, the famous monoliths within the Port Campbell National Park. These picturesque freestanding rocks are what remains after steady erosion of the cliffs.

At the end of a long day, we were back at our hotel by 8 PM when Dawнна and I rushed off to a Chinatown restaurant nearby to enjoy a dinner hosted by Bosco and Frank Correa and their wives, Marilyn and Vivienne. I hadn't seen Frank and Bosco since our Hong Kong days. Neither Dawнна nor I had met their wives. Our reunion was all-too-short.

Monday, Nov. 14:

Melbourne – Cairns

We took an early flight for Cairns (population: 93,000) in Northern Queensland, the gateway to the Great Barrier Reef, big game fishing in the Coral Sea, the tropical rainforest, Cape York Peninsula and the outback. We landed in Cairns airport at noon where a chartered bus took us into town for lunch and then took our luggage back to the Lakes resort where we were to stay for the next three days.

During the short drive into town, we noted the difference in the landscape and vegetation compared to the flat terrain and gum trees in the Victorian countryside. Steep, lush mountains, yellow sugar-cane fields, palm trees, ferns, jacarandas, poincianas, and hibiscuses as well as the vivid emerald green, turquoise and indigo waters reminded us of Hawaii.

Lunch was at the Red Ochre Grill restaurant, which had the reputation for developing part of its menu using Australian native ingredients. Some tried an appetizer dish consisting of emu paté, crocodile wun ton with capsicum (green pepper) jam, smoked kangaroo, smoked Tasmanian sea trout (a mild-tasting salmon), omelette and roast capsicum roll, which they found flavourful. Sorry, nothing tasted like chicken! Nicky Wu tried a grilled kangaroo sirloin with Guandong chili glaze and sweet potato galette, and found it a bit tough as kangaroo meat lean with very little fat. I had a fillet of Barramundi, a delicate white fish, with pineapple and wild lime salsa.

At 6 PM José and Susan Ozorio picked us up and drove us to a vantage point in the surrounding hills and pointed out to us the city's landmarks, its downtown, districts, and Trinity Bay, before we went to have dinner at a restaurant near the Esplanade.

Tuesday, Nov. 15, Great Barrier Reef

Today we were going to the Great Barrier Reef, a network of 2,900 coral reef systems along the Queensland coast from Cape York to Bundaberg, a distance of 1,400 miles. It is a World Heritage marine sanctuary.

An 80 -mile coach ride north from Cairns along the two-lane curving scenic coastal Captain Cook highway brought us to Port Douglas (pop.

4,000) where we boarded a sleek Quicksilver catamaran with other tourists to take us to the Great Barrier Reef.

In the beautiful warm sunny weather and a calm sea, our vessel sped north along the coast past several low-lying rain-forest covered islands, then it turned east towards the Agincourt Reef, a group of small reefs about a mile and a half from the edge of the continental shelf where it drops to a depth of 1,600 feet. Here the clean, clear water from the depths washes over the coral and promotes the growth of marine life – what we came to see.

Some passengers donned snorkelling or scuba gear to go under water to look at the reef life, while others swam in the warm waters. Dawnna and I and about ten others went down below sea level inside a glass-sided submersible, while a marine biologist crew member pointed out the various corals, fishes and other creatures as we cruised slowly by.

At 2:40 PM a blast on the ship's horn signalled it was time to return to the catamaran, this was followed by a passenger count to ensure that everyone was accounted for before the vessel left the platform.

Later on our return trip, Maria Roliz showed us two cakes she had quietly purchased before leaving Cairns in order to give Dawnna and Hunter a joint surprise birthday party. Dawnna was appreciative and greatly touched by this thoughtful gesture. We returned to Cairns at about 6 PM via Port Douglas.

That evening, Maria Roliz, Hunter Choi, and others hailed a taxi and went out of our complex to buy all the necessities for yet another splendid meal, our colleagues put together a delicious barbecue by the swimming pool and patio near our rooms. My cousin José Ozorio, wife Susan and daughter René were delighted to join us at the pleasant and salubrious poolside patio. Dawnna says that she will never forget her birthday at the Great Barrier Reef, followed by the dinner around the pool with congenial friends and relatives at the Lakes Resort in Cairns.

Wednesday, Nov. 16, Cairns – Kuranda

Our bus took us to the Kuranda historic train terminal in Cairns where we boarded a 19th century train and railway that had been built to transport gold from the Hodgkinson Goldfield to Cairns. The train winds its way on steep and difficult terrain through 15 tunnels, past Barron Gorge and Falls, and Stoney Creek Falls, to reach Kuranda Station.

We were introduced to Aboriginal culture at the Kuranda Village Nature Park, which was filled with visitors, many from the Far East. Four strapping members of the Pamagirri Aborigine troupe performed vigorous native dances accompanied by traditional instruments.

That afternoon we boarded the Skyrail, a system of small glassed-enclosed gondolas suspended from cables over the World Heritage rain-forest canopy. Our Skyrail gondola ferried us, flying carpet style, over the rainforest canopy, giving us an unusual close-up view of the tree tops below, and the distant landscape, to the terminal at the bottom of the mountain where our bus awaited us to take us back to our resort.

scenic point in the Botanical Gardens for some post-card views of the harbour and landmarks.

We returned just before noon in time to board a sleek multi-decked vessel run by the Captain Cook Cruise. Our two-hour cruise of Sydney harbour took us from the King Street Wharf east to

Tower which offers stunning 360° views of the metropolis

Sunday, November 20, Sydney

On an overcast day, with no events scheduled until the evening, Dawnna and I visited Darling Harbor and Cockle Bay, west of our hotel. In the 1980s this former industrial and shipping district was successfully redeveloped into a cultural and visitor-oriented area including the Sydney Aquarium, the National Maritime Museum, the Motor Museum and Gallery, the Powerhouse Museum, the Convention and Visitor Center, supporting hotels, the Harbourside Shopping Complex, the Imax movie theater, and the Chinese Garden of Friendship.

In the evening our group were guests at a "Welcome Lusitano Tour" – Christmas banquet hosted by the Casa de Macau at the Marigold Restaurant in Chinatown. Over 250 people filled the large barrel vaulted room. Guests at the head table included the Portuguese Consul General, Chinese Consular officials, and representatives of the Macau Tourist Office .

Yvonne Herrero, president of the Casa de Macau, the National Macanese Association in Australia and other casa representatives welcomed us. Lusitano president Maria Roliz and Yvonne Herrero exchanged gifts on behalf of their clubs.

Our Lusitano group were re-acquainted with old friends and relatives, some of whom they hadn't seen in years. Dawnna and I sat at a table which included Alvaro and Therese Alonço. Carlos Remedios, and his wife Charito.

It was a fitting end to a terrific trip which exposed us to Australia and the Aussies. I admire their great country, their cities, their love of sports, their sense of humor, their can-do attitude, their down-to-earth qualities, their bravery in war.

A bouquet to Bonnie Braga for her meticulous tour arrangements, and for her flexibility in accommodating changes requested by participants.

In the evening we had dinner at the Ozorio home in Cairns, meeting other members of their family, while the rest of the tour group gathered at the patio around the pool, and finished off Tuesday's leftover barbecued steaks.

Thursday, Nov. 17:

Cairns – Sydney

We caught the noon flight to Sydney, arriving there at 5 PM. During the aircraft's descent we had an aerial view of Sydney's magnificent harbour which, together with those of Hong Kong, Naples, and Rio de Janeiro, are regarded as the world's most beautiful. Sydney is also famous for its Harbour Bridge known to natives as the "coat-hanger," its Opera House, and its surfing beaches.

Friday, November 18:

Sydney Tour

Today's itinerary consisted of an all-day tour of Sydney including its famous Opera House, a harbour cruise luncheon, and a drive through the city's most interesting districts.

Our bus dropped us off at the Opera House's vast forecourt from where the Harbour Bridge can be seen to the left. The Opera House's sail-like roofs loom over its monumental stairs where spontaneous outdoor performances have taken place. The bridge and Opera House combine to form arresting and indelible image.

Before going on a cruise of Sydney harbour our bus stopped briefly at the historical Mrs. Macquarie's Chair, a the harbour opening to the Tasman Sea, and back in a wide loop giving us great views of the downtown skyline, all city major landmarks, the surrounding areas, the upmarket houses on the many inlets, peninsulas, and islands. As our vessel left the dock, we were treated to a buffet spread which included the small Bluepoint oysters, prized at Hong Kong eateries in the old days.

The rest of the afternoon consisted of a bus tour of Sydney's most interesting residential districts. As the tour schedule gave us a free evening, most of the group went out on their own while Bonnie and Fabia Braga, Orlanda da Costa, Dawnna and I were guests for dinner at Therese and Alvaro Alonço's home in the suburbs, about 40 minutes from our hotel. The evening was enjoyable with news and gossip of relatives and mutual friends, and reminisces of old times. Though we ate well throughout the tour, the excellent feijoada and capella Therese prepared was just the Macanese comfort food we craved.

Saturday, November 19, Sydney

In the morning, half of our group went to Featherdale Wildlife Park in Doonside, some 40 minutes away from the city center, to see some of the 2,000 native animals such as kangaroos, koalas, emus, wombats, reptiles and birds in bush settings. The rest of us wandered around the city center, the waterfront or went to the beach. Some went to the 1,000 ft. high Sydney

A DOCTOR, LAWMAKER AND COMMUNITY CAMPAIGNER

SIR ALBERT RODRIGUES

When Albert Rodrigues was a boy in Happy Valley, he saw a hapless cripple lying in the street, arms and legs covered with open, weeping sores. He vowed to become a doctor.

He never knew his mother, who died shortly after he was born. So when a rare scholarship gained him entry to the University of Hong Kong, he opted to specialise in obstetrics and gynaecology. "I wanted to look after other mothers," he reflected at the age of 94. "I didn't want them to die like my mother."

But his contribution to Hong Kong was not confined to medicine. Voted onto the Urban Council in 1940, he spent more than three decades as an active lawmaker and valued adviser to governors, sitting on the legislative and executive councils. He was pro-chancellor of his alma mater for 26 years, helped found the Anti-Tuberculosis Society and became the first Portuguese to be knighted in Hong Kong, recognising his life-long drive to combat narcotics.

As a young doctor, he saw active duty with a Royal Hong Kong Volunteer Defence Force ambulance unit during savage fighting in Wan Chai Gap in the second world war. When other officers were interned in a separate camp, Rodrigues opted to remain with the enlisted men at their prisoner-of-war camp at Shamshuipo. During the occupation, he treated the ill and dying with patient devotion.

Rodrigues' long life was rich and rewarding, but began with tragedy. His mother's death occurred a week after he was born, and his father died when he was aged nine. The boy was brought up by an uncle, one member of an extensive family. His grandfather, a mariner in the long tradition of Portuguese seafarers, had arrived in Chinese waters in the 19th century.

He did well at school, starting at a convent run by Italian nuns and then at St. Joseph's College. He got his high-school matriculation at 14 and had to wait two years before he could enter university. He was able to study at what was then an elite preserve for the wealthy because of generous financial help from a Chinese benefactor. That same aid allowed him to continue his studies in London.

Rodrigues began his practice in Hong Kong in 1937, specialising in obstetrics. By 1940, aged just 29, he had entered the Urban Council. He was also a lieutenant in the volunteer force, which led to his inevitable imprisonment during the war. His faithful attendance to his fellow prisoners of war saved the lives of many who endured hard toil on a meagre diet. It also led to the award of a military MBE when liberation came in 1945. He was later awarded a civil MBE, and was knighted in 1966 while senior unofficial member of the Executive Council.

He was a devoted father to a daughter and two sons. "It's funny how life moves along," he said last February, looking at family pictures dating back to the 1870s. "If I had not got that scholarship I couldn't have gone to university. I don't know what I would have done for a living." He chuckled as he looked at a 1941 photograph of himself and other young doctors in uniform. "During the fighting for Hong Kong Island, I was resting on the steps of an ambulance and a Japanese bomb landed a metre away," he said. "It didn't explode."

He brushed over the grim years as a prisoner of war, mentioning only the constant preoccupation with "rice, rice, rice", and how he encouraged prisoners to plant tomatoes over the camp grounds. "Japanese didn't like eating tomatoes," he explained dryly.

A walking skeleton when freedom came in 1945, Rodrigues went straight to work on the gigantic task of rebuilding the devastated, depopulated and shattered city. A keen sportsman in his youth, he captained the Hong Kong hockey side and played cricket for the University of Hong Kong.

The man he most admired was Sir David Trench, the last of the colonial civil servants who served as governor of Hong Kong. He said Sir David was a conscientious, hard-working and effective servant of the people who had never been given the recognition he deserved. The same could be said of Rodrigues.
